New Message

To: [Influencer Name] <[email@domain.com]>

From: Outcall Team <founder@outcall.app>

Subject: A brutally honest tool for hunters. Care to break it?

Hey [Name],

I've been watching your channel for a couple of years now, and what I appreciate most is that you don't sugarcoat reality. You show the blown stalks, the missed shots, and the grueling grinds just as much as the successes. It's authentic, and it's why people trust you.

I'm reaching out to you hunter to hunter, not as a marketer, because we just built something born out of pure frustration, and I want your honest, unfiltered opinion on it.

For years, practicing my calls drove me crazy. I'd sit in my truck with the heater blasting, playing a master reference track of a mallard feed or an elk bugle, and then I'd blow my call trying to mimic it. But no matter what I did, I was driving blind. Does my pitch match? Am I holding the note too long? How do I actually know I sound right before I get into the woods and flare the birds?

The hunting industry has a thousand tools for tracking weather, wind, and property lines, but nothing to actually tell you if your mechanics suck.

So, we built Outcall.

We took real-time frequency analysis algorithms—the kind audio engineers use—and put them in a mobile app designed specifically for hunters. You play a master reference track directly from our library, grab your call, and physically watch your acoustic waveform and frequency match against the real animal on the screen.

It grades your cadence, your pitch, your volume. It is humbling, occasionally infuriating, and entirely addicting.

We are going into a closed Alpha immediately, and I have five unlocked, lifetime profiles to give to guys in the community whose opinions actually hold weight.

I want you to have one.

I won’t ask you to post about it, make a video, or shill it to your audience. My only condition is that I want you to try it, push it to its limits, and tell me directly what you hate about it and what we got right.

If you're willing to take a look, reply to this email, and I'll shoot over the beta access link right now.

Either way, good luck this season. Hope to hear from you.

[Your Name]
Founder, Outcall
www.outcall.app